Explanation If you are living together as an unmarried couple and you have a cohabitation agreement with your partner, you can enroll your partner with the Pension Fund. Please enclose an authenticated copy or extract of the cohabitation agreement. After registration, your partner will be entitled to a partner's pension in the event of your predecease. If, after registration, you and your partner separate, your former partner is entitled to the partner's pension that was accrued until the date when the cohabitation agreement was terminated. This is called the special partner's pension, which enters into effect following your predecease. If you have left Shell and are entitled to a deferred pension, you can also enroll your partner with the Pension Fund. You must do this before you retire. You may not enroll your partner after your retirement. The full terms and conditions for the registration of your partner are laid down in the pension regulations.
